Brick Building to Replace Historic School

A large modern brick school is to replace the historic old Ironside school at Indooroopilly, where many prominent citizens received their early education. The new building will comprise four large class rooms, teachers' rooms, and necessary corridors, together with a large basement play area. At a meeting of the Ironside school committee pleasure was expressed at the decision of the Government to provide a school to replace the inadequate and antiquated wooden structure, part of which has served as a school for more than 60 years. The committee decided to launch an appeal for funds with the object of providing sporting and other equipment in keeping with the new school.
